Lacey Act

Lacey Act “Operation Rock Bottom”

As part of Operation Rock Bottom, Curtis W. Waters pleaded guilty to a Lacey Act violation for offering more than 100 specimens of Ricordea Florida for sale. Ricordea Florida is a species of coral that is very popular in saltwater aquariums.

Waters holds a Saltwater Products License (SPL) issued by the Florida Fish & Wildlife Conservation Commission (FWCC). The SPL authorized him, among other things, to harvest live Ricordea Florida, which is native to the salt water reefs of South Florida.

In August 2013, Waters contacted an individual in Colorado (who was cooperating with agents) advising that he would be in the Keys collecting marine specimens and would have “more” Ricordea Florida for sale. At the direction of U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service agents, the cooperator ordered 150 Ricordea. On September 2, 2013, Waters called the buyer, confirming the order would be sent via Federal Express. The package was received by the buyer in Colorado a few days later with an invoice for $600 ($4 each). The cash was subsequently deposited into Waters’ account.

This case was investigated jointly by the NOAA Office of Law Enforcement and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Office of Law Enforcement.

Lacey Act Sentence

In another case from Operation Rock Bottom, Charles R. Jamison was sentenced after previously pleading guilty to a Lacey Act conspiracy violation for the sale and purchase of juvenile bonnethead sharks.

Jamison will complete an 18-month term of probation and will pay a $2,000 fine. He is barred from engaging in the marine wildlife industry during the period of probation and will forfeit the vessel, trailer, tackle, and gear he used in the illegal activity.

Between June 2012 and October 2012, Jamison engaged in the illegal harvest and sale of bonnethead sharks taken from the waters off the Florida Keys, and in the Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary. The animals were then shipped by a variety of means, including rental truck and as commercial air cargo.

This case was investigated jointly by the NOAA Office of Law Enforcement and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Office of Law Enforcement.

Endangered Species Act

Endangered Species Act Violations

A Federal Magistrate Judge in Puerto Rico sentenced Natalio Alvarez Sanchez for the take of an endangered green sea turtle. Alvarez’s sentence included probation for a term of fifteen months, surrendering his fishing license, and a ban from fishing or participating in any fishing activities while on probation. Alvarez was also ordered to complete 200 hours of community services.

The investigation conducted by an Aguadilla, PR Field Office special agent revealed that while fishing with a hand line from a pier at Isla de Roque of Barceloneta, Puerto Rico, Alvarez hooked what he initially believed to be a large fish. When it turned out he had caught a Green Sea turtle he placed the turtle in a five gallon bucket and placed the bucket into the trunk of his vehicle. An off duty prison guard observed the incident and immediately contacted the Puerto Rico Department of Environmental and Natural Resources (DNER) Arecibo Maritime Unit, and the provided a physical description of the subject and his vehicle.

Two PR DNER officers responded to the area and confronted Alvarez with the information they had received. Alvarez granted consent and opened the vehicle's trunk for the officers. The Officers found the Green sea turtle inside the five Gallon bucket in a lethargic and unresponsive state.

PR DNER officers contacted the NOAA Office of Law Enforcement and were instructed to attempt to revive the sea turtle by following the Protected Resources sea turtle resuscitation protocol. The sea turtle quickly responded and was placed in a shallow pool near the shore until the sea turtle recovered and swam back into the ocean.
